"We've served Saskatchewan for 12 years from our Regina Terminal," said Mary Waring, President, "but our growth here has been dramatic in the past three years. It became apparent that Western Logistics needed a Saskatoon distribution centre in order to fully participate in the good projects happening in Saskatchewan."

The start-up facility is about 5000 sq. ft. with two loading doors and ample yard space for staging extra trailers. "This facility will certainly take some pressure off our Regina facility, where we've been struggling to cope," said Ray Berg, Manager Saskatchewan Operations. "Our new set-up will let us handle large projects better. I'm pleased with this change."

Did you know?

That people sometimes ask: Why is Western Logistics so aggressive in building its own Distribution Centers? Doesn't this cost more than just operating multi-stop loads for direct drops, like the truckload carriers do?

The first answer is that developers don't build the kind of building layouts we need to provide our unique service options. The second answer is that our own buildings have very little impact on the cost of our freight operations. Good buildings give us great efficiency, and we recover most of our facility costs from storage and distribution services, which are quite separate from our freight operations and rates. We see our buildings as full-service centers, able to do anything logistical our customers may require.
